

Ludovic Clément d'Armont is a self-proclaimed Semeur d'Étoiles (“star sower”) who creates moons and planets in mouth-blown glass. “I looked at Hubble and other astronomical pictures and spent a year experimenting with how I could produce globes that would evoke these pictures,” he says. “It took a few hundred attempts before I selected the best.” The closely guarded process requires two people, and involves adding crushed marble to melted glass whilst blowing. The resulting lamps are suspended alone (from $1,100) or in cascading chandeliers (from $21,000), while irregular “Météore” table lamps (from $2,900) sit on Space Age-style tripods.

Semeur d'Étoiles Planètes chandelier, from $21,000 © Ludovic Clément d'Armont